

THE BENEFITS OF ADVERTISING IN The High Sheriff

- ◆ Direct access to a highly affluent and influential group of readers who are of significant social standing in their local community.
- ◆ Most past and present High Sheriffs manage or run their own business in: commerce; farming; and the professions and are connected to an extensive network of charities, local organisations and committees.
- ◆ The readers both use and purchase a wide variety of luxury services and materials, especially during their term of Office as High Sheriff.
- ◆ Advertisers will be helping the Association's two registered charities, which support local groups involved in crime prevention.

The High Sheriff magazine has a circulation of over 1400, comprising High Sheriffs both past and present, High Sheriffs in nomination, High Court Judges, Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and other prominent organisations and individuals. This presents advertisers with a unique opportunity to target this affluent and discerning audience. The Magazine provides members of the Association with essential news, reports and details of forthcoming events, as well as highlighting the aims and achievements of National Crimebeat, the Butler Trust Awards to Prison Service staff.

The duties and responsibilities of the modern day High Sheriff are:

- ◆ Attendance at Royal visits
- ◆ To provide hospitality and look after the well-being of High Court Judges on Circuit
- ◆ Acting as the Returning Officer for parliamentary elections
- ◆ Responsibility for the proclamation of the accession of a new Sovereign
- ◆ Maintenance of the loyalty of subjects to the Crown
- ◆ To undertake duties to support and encourage voluntary and statutory organisations engaged in all aspects of law and order
- ◆ To work with organisations involved with young people, in particular through the Association's two Charities, National Crimebeat which encourages young people between the ages of 5 and 25 to help create safer communities in which to live
- ◆ In accordance with the Criminal Law Act 1826, to make monetary awards to those, who in the opinion of the Judges at a criminal trial, have been active in the apprehension of certain offenders
- ◆ Since February 2004, as one of the two royal appointees in each county of England and Wales, participation in the recently established Citizenship Ceremonies at which new Citizens make an oath of allegiance to the Queen and receive their Certificate of Citizenship
